RUNAWAY HORSES

Madison was in her yard. She heard some people yelling. Two horses ran past. There was a big dark brown horse and a smaller light brown horse. They ran around the corner.

Then two people ran down the street. "Where are our horses?" they asked. Madison told them where their horses had gone. She pointed down the street.

"I will help you," Madison said. "I will bring you some apples. Horses like to eat apples."

The people thanked her. They went away to look for their horses. When Madison came out with the apples, the people were gone.

Madison decided she should look for the horses, too. Madison's mother and father both helped. They found the horses in the playground.

"Walk slowly, so they won't run away," Madison's father said. "They are lost and scared."

Madison put some apples on the ground. The horses ate them. Madison's parents held the horses. Madison ran and found the people. "We have your horses," she said.

"Thank you!" the people said. "Good work!"
